Page 143 Both Apache and mod_perl are open source programs offered under the GNU General Public Licsense (GPL).The GPL gives Apache and mod_perl users and developers permission to use, modify, and redistribute the source code or binaries to both programs. only condition imposed on these permissions include that modified or redistributed versions of the programs must also be licensed under the GPL with the same permissions (Incidentally, programs written in Perl for mod_perl or Apache are not bound by this license because they are considered dynamically linked libraries and therefore separate from the licensed programs.). In addition, both the Apache server and mod_perl are made freely available for download from the Apache project Web site.	Both Apache and mod_perl are open source programs offered under the Apache Software License (ASL). The ASL gives Apache and mod_perl users and developers permission to use, modify, and redistribute the source code or binaries to both programs. The conditions imposed on these permissions include that modified or redistributed versions of the programs must not use the Apache name without permission. Both the Apache server and mod_perl are made freely available for download from the Apache project Web site.
